Protect THIS House

2 John 1:7–11

A great deal of prayer, sacrifice, and work goes into building a church that is welcoming, hospitable, and caring. But the church must also remain a place where truth matters. In 2 John, believers are called to love generously while refusing to give influence to voices that distort the truth about Christ. Christian hospitality does not require spiritual compromise.

Protecting the house begins by staying connected to “what we have had from the beginning” (2 John 5–6). When churches forget why they exist, self-preservation, institutional survival, personal preferences, and nostalgia can replace faithfulness. Instead of asking, “What do we want our church to be?” God's people must continually ask, “What is God doing, and how can we faithfully join Him?”

Every person in the house therefore has a responsibility: know the truth, remain in Christ, practice discerning love, and guard what is allowed to shape our common life. Protecting the house is not about becoming suspicious or inhospitable. It is about loving God and one another enough to recognize that truth is worth protecting.
